Description

There is still an error with the Bug reporting system as previously reported in Bug BR-020. I received an email re Bug-025 to ask me to confirm as fixed. I found an issue so clicked the 'No still broken' option and the link expired error occurred again. See screenshots.

Email received

The screenshot shows the Microsoft Outlook web application interface. The left sidebar displays the folder hierarchy under 'emma@acsitd.eu' and 'andy@acsitd.eu'. The main pane shows an email from 'ACS Safety & Security — Software Development Team' dated Thursday, 18/06/2026 at 09:48. The email subject is 'Your TPR issue BR-025 has been resolved'. The body contains a message from Emma stating that the issue has been fixed and provides a detailed report of the problem and its resolution.

Email Body:

Hi Emma,

Good news — the issue you reported has now been fixed.

YOUR REPORT (BR-025)

"This error reports back on the fix made in BR-021. The 10 minute cooldown alert appears without informing the user that they have failed the quiz. It says the lockdown will provide time to review the questions but doesn't present the questions until the next screen. User needs to be informed they have failed and about the 10 minute lockdown and also be presented with the questions to review, of course without the ability to make changes. When the time has elapsed, the user needs to be prompted to re-try the quiz"

WHAT WE DID

Two changes made to SiteInduction.tsx: Cooldown gate now skips when quizResults is set — it only activates when navigating back to the page or after clicking Retry (when quizResults has been cleared). Right after submission, the unified failure screen takes over instead. Failure block replaced with a single unified screen that shows all of Emma's requirements together: ● "Induction Not Passed" card with exact score (You scored 65% — you need 80% to pass) and attempts remaining ⌚ Live 10-min

Can you confirm the issue is sorted?

Response Options:

- ☒ Yes, this is fixed
- ☐ X No, still broken
